He is a specialist in Romance philology and Romance dialectology. Leistner received his Ph.D. degree from the University of Zurich in 1946 and his habilitation from the University of Basel in 1972. He was initially a professor at the University of Geneva and of the University of Fribourg, and then at the University of Basel. He moved to the University of California, Berkeley, where he held the Chair in Romance Languages and Literatures until 2008 and is now a professor emeritus there. His studies include some of the most relevant grammatical, lexical, and literary works pertaining to 19th century and 20th century Romance. For his works on the French dialects of Provençal, he developed the Generalized Syllabic Theory. This theory posits that words were inherited from Vulgar Latin in the Vulgar as one syllable, and then they evolved into a two-syllable one (adjacent syllables) or into a three-syllable one (adjacent syllables). For that he used the term leo-syllable to designate the inherited one-syllable, and sponda-syllable to designate the two-syllable. He also used the term "distinctive words" to designate the Middle French words that remained distinctly distinct from Latin words. He is a longtime collaborator with and the resulting series of translations of literary works from Spanish and Portuguese has reached over 350 titles. His edited books include Michel Labarrière: Foreword and bibliography, the fourth in a series 09e8f5149f
