2010 installed on the laptop or computer? A: The process of activation of the product key consists of three steps: Microsoft Office 2010 installation and first use; Microsoft Office 2010 activation using the previously stored activation code; Microsoft Office 2010 activation using the new activation code (confirmation code). Steps 1 and 2 and are performed via the Customer

Lifecycle Service. There are a few known reasons for which the activation procedure ends with the so-called "confirmation code". The first and most common one is that the activation procedure fails to install the product key or fails to store the activation key. Check the integrity of the product key file. If it is OK, then the problem is not on the MS Office 2010 installation. The cause of the problem may be connected with the activation via Internet, that means that the customer account was active during the activation procedure and the activation code was stored for a long time. If the MS Office 2010 installation was done as a test of the product key, check if there are any errors in the product key itself or in the file paths for the update. Another reason is that the Microsoft Office

---

2010 installation can not be performed. It may happen if the Office or Windows installation is already installed. At this time, the activation key was not installed. You should force the customer to perform
