How do you put together the best content to create images of your subject that will draw people in and make them want to know more? Of course, the start of any creative process is finding that subject matter. While the Internet offers an almost limitless amount of images, most of those images are perfect for stock photography. Advanced features for Photoshop The most popular of the Adobe tools in Photoshop is the Image Trace. This tool allows you to accurately trace any type of photograph, whether it be an old digital image, a print from a magazine, or a piece of artwork. The Image Trace makes it easy to copy and paste objects or type into another document. Although the Image Trace is extremely useful, it also has its downfalls, such as being very time consuming. The Image Trace program requires lots of space on your hard drive, and because it requires a starting point, it is limited to tracing one image at a time. You can rotate and scale the image as you trace it, but it's not easy. Adobe has a plugin for the program known as Photoshop Trace. Using this plugin, you can trace many images at once, and it is incredibly fast. Another trick found in Photoshop is the Replace Pixel tool. In this tool, you can select a small area on a photo and then replace the area with the image you wish to use. The tools discussed in this section can all be found in Photoshop CC. You may encounter some of the older versions of Photoshop in the streets, but these tools have been removed, and no longer work. You can still find the older Adobe tools in the Adobe Legacy library at www.adobe.com/legacyapps. ## Taking Simple Steps to Mix and Match One of the most popular image-editing programs is Photoshop. This program allows you to change color, draw, and layer content on your pictures. From a large image to a small thumbnail, the possibilities are almost endless. Although Photoshop has many tools, they are used for different purposes. So which

Due to the excessive rust they have been stored outside for over a year, so this was the only way I could get them out safely. This is basically a 5 gallon can, but with a twist. Each lid has a threaded brass bung with a brass nipple drilled into it. The black part is a metal stand, and the purple is made from decorative ceramic (I think it's a bunny). I use this can for shaking water out of soap, unfortunately I couldn't find it a topo friendly container, so these will have to have me take off the table... But I think it looks pretty cool. Calcium plus ascorbate activates the antioxidant enzyme selenium-dependent glutathione peroxidase and protects against radiation-induced oxidative damage in mice and human lymphocytes. The antioxidant properties of the calcium and ascorbate combination are known, but not the effects of this combination on radiation-induced oxidative damage. This study investigated the protective effects of this combination against oxidative damage in a murine (CEI-12TG) and a human (Daudi) tumor cell line, and in human lymphocytes treated in vitro. In mice, a single dose of radiation significantly reduced the levels of the glutathione peroxidase (GPx) enzyme and its selenium-containing (Se-GPx) form, and increased lipid peroxidation. Tissue selenium levels were reduced. The addition of either calcium alone or calcium plus ascorbate increased the levels of GPx and Se-GPx and reduced lipid peroxidation in bone marrow, spleen, and intestine. In both mice and humans, the combination treatment increased glutathione (GSH) levels in lymphocytes and protected against radiation-induced depletion of cellular GSH levels. The addition of the combination also protected against a lipid peroxide-induced apoptosis in lymphocytes. Thus, the synergistic combination of ascorbate and calcium may have potential as a therapeutic agent for protecting against radiation-induced oxidative damage in a variety of tissues.
