Note Graphics editors are available on Windows for free: * Xara Xtreme 2.0 ( www.xara.com) * Paintshop Pro X (www.macgraphicssoft.com) * CorelDRAW Graphics Suite X3 (www.coreldraw.com) * GIMP (www.gimp.org) # Content-Aware Fill and Content-Aware Move One of the most exciting new features in Photoshop CC is the _Content-Aware Fill_ and _Content-Aware Move_ commands, found under the _Filters_ menu. It's a little like a graphic find-and-replace feature that can often replace a standard fill with a more appropriate one. For instance, say you have a ton of blue flowers and want to replace them with white ones, but you don't want to replace every blue flower. With the Content-Aware Fill and Content-Aware Move features you can select a few individual ones and then make the changes using the Lasso tool. If you make a mistake, you can reverse the selection, and after a while the spot is filled again. 1. **With the Lasso tool (L) selected, choose Select** → **Content-Aware Move**. 2. **From the Content-Aware Move dialog box, select the Apply to All button**. A dialog box appears asking for a name for your selection. Make a selection on a flower photo, and you'll see a preview (Figure 3-16). Press OK to accept the selection. Figure 3-16. Use the Content-Aware Move tool to add just enough of the contents of one photo to another photo. A preview at the bottom of the dialog box indicates where it'll add the contents. 3. **In the Content-Aware Move dialog box, choose the Apply to Selected button**. The preview of your photo moves over to the selected flower, and the tool automatically adds the color to the flower. 4. **In the Content-Aware Move dialog box, select the Reverse button**. The flowers

Broward Schools Eager To Move Ahead, But Not Without Problem Enlarge this image toggle caption AP AP There are 53 high-performing students in the classroom at Andrew Jackson School in Brooklyn. They are selected by their teachers and administrators, who know their people. One teacher, Virgie, says the students are the best in her school. "There are only five or six other students in this building that get the same academic award. And all of them are going to Westinghouse," Virgie said. "This is an area that is not generally talked about." That's the way it has been for the past 80 years in the largely residential Brooklyn neighborhood, where about 5,000 students go to school. Private schools like Andrew Jackson make life difficult, says Vince Nairn, superintendent of schools in the nearby Broward County, Florida. He's been working on a plan to ease that problem. "What this really means is that this neighborhood is stuck at a place that it's never been. And there's never been any effort or progress to actually rezoning the area around that school," Nairn said. No student would be admitted to Andrew Jackson School unless they are at or above the school's test scores. And over half of the students leave before high school. "The bottom line is, these kids are being kept out of opportunity because they live in a neighborhood where they have no choice but to live," Nairn said. Mariela Espinoza hasn't heard much on any of that. She's a fifth-grader in Andrew Jackson School and she's proud of her neighborhood. "This is where I live," she said. "It's a safe place." She's one of 53 students with straight A's and Advanced Placement credits, a rarity in Broward County. Her family says they have no hope of getting her into other high-performing schools, because they live in a low-income neighborhood. "There are a lot of people in my neighborhood that don't have school. I can see. It looks like a big empty. A lot of kids live in my area," she said. Cedar Shoals Elementary School, up the block from Andrew Jackson, is mostly white. Angie Mitchell is the principal there. She has students from all over the neighborhood, but her school is a bit more like Andrew Jackson.
